"Puddle Duck"—"Mt. Holly" EDS. INTELLIGENCER:
We were quite a good deal interested in the extract you published last week from the Oxford Press in reference to the rechristening of the romantic, classical station, on the Peach Bottom railway. There is not sufficient antiquity about us to tell exactly how long, but for a long while—even for a long while before the idea of the Peach Bottom railroad was conceived—the place now desired by the colored population to be called Mt. Holly, was known euphoniously as "Puddle Duck." No one knows "whence came the town" or name, but it is generally supposed that they, like Topsy, "grewed." This town is situated in Fulton township, on a small stream that winds toward the Susquehanna, through a small valley, that would be really pretty, if the town, which is composed of several low, dirty, crazy scattered houses, was not there. The houses are all built on hills—our colored brothers, like the ground-hog, always hunt a hill-side for their habitations. With "Puddle Duck" for a name, Time passed over the town and its inhabitants, whose complexions would suggest that Time, in passing, left a shadow upon them; and one hard winter the meat supply of the town was exhausted, and want stalked through her streets. So, one favorable night, some of the most influential citizens of the town, put trust in each other and sallied forth to take an inventory of the meat supply of Fairfield.
They seemed to consider it too large for that town of Rebellion fame, and appropriate Mr. Wm. Boyd's portion of it to themselves, which portion they lost no time in conveying to their sweet valley, where they stored it for the time being under the floor of a pig-sty, where it was found by the investigating committee which Fairfield sent out the next day.

The free-born offenders paid a short visit to Lancaster, but soon returned to their native town, where they still live, with the exception, perhaps, of one or two, who have "climbed the golden stair." But lo! when they returned to their "good old homes" they found that the name of their ancient town had been changed to the suggestive one of "Ham Hollow." Thus time took another flight, and the Peach Bottom railway came, snail-like, down the valley; and, with gallant magnanimity, took the town, a fitting bride, to its arms, and named it "Arcadia."

We have not been able to learn whether it was thought that this was the most appropriate name for the home of such people as the Hollow owned for inhabitants, taken from a standard of intelligence, or that Pan and Diana instead of ham and ditch, should there be worshipped, or that it best suited their character, from their love of music and dancing, and other qualities characteristic of Arcadians. Be that as it may, Arcadia it was named.

Following the railroad soon came a church—strange contradiction. Then the idea found its way through the Arcadian wool that they should move their Rigby yearly and quarterly meetings from "old Rigby's," which now stands a tottering ruin, as if destruction had broken its spirit, to the Arcadian vale; and the old historic names and scenes remain a sad protest against modern folly.

Now they would re-name it Mt. Holly.
All right; we've no objections. But we would say as a warning, if St. Peter ever time erases the old and writes the new name on his map, there is some danger of wearing a hole through it, through which some of Mt. Holly's saints may drop to somewhere else. DRUMORE.

The Chinchbug.
Invaders of Our Western Grainfields.

The following synopsis of a report on the chinchbug by Dr. Cyrus Thomas, president of the Illinois university, and member of the United States entomological commission, which has just been prepared, gives its history, characters and habits, and the means of destroying it or counteracting its injuries. He says the chinchbug (Blissus cupatorius say) is unquestionably the most formidable insect pest with which the farmers within the wheat-producing area of the United States have to contend.

The locusts of the West are the only creatures of this class whose multiplication causes more sweeping destruction than that of this diminutive and seemingly insignificant insect. The loss from this insect in Illinois alone in 1870 was estimated at $4,000,000, an average of $4.70 to every man, woman and child then living in the state. It attained the maximum of its development in the summer of 1864, in the extensive wheat and corn fields of the valley of the Mississippi, and in that single year three-fourths of the wheat and one-half of the corn crops were destroyed throughout many extensive districts, comprising almost the entire Northwest, with an estimated loss of more than $100,000,000 in currency. The course of their severest ravages is in a belt in Illinois on about a line with the junction of Iowa and Missouri, and taking in a corresponding part of Southern Iowa and Nebraska and of Northern Missouri and Kansas. The loss by chinchbugs in the state of Illinois in 1871 was upward of $10,500,000, and taking an equal amount in Iowa and Missouri, and again an equal amount in Indiana, Kansas, Nebraska and Wisconsin, the loss in these states alone from this one species of insect was upward of $30,000,000.

As the species appear to have at maximum of development about every five years, the foregoing estimates, Mr. Thomas thinks, render it probable that the annual loss to the nation by its operations averages $20,000,000. The insect first appeared in Illinois in 1840, in Iowa in 1847, in Indiana and Wisconsin in 1854 and in 1871 over the entire Northwest. Of natural agencies which assist in their destruction, Dr. Thomas says that the chinchbug has no such relentless enemies as those that pursue the army worm, plant lice, etc.
There are a few insects that prey upon the larvæ, but not sufficiently numerous to make any material impression on the vast hordes of these invaders of our grain fields. The most efficient of these aids mentioned is the herp-actor cinctus, or banded bug, and the frog.
Professor Ross expresses the belief that the destruction of the frog by draining their natural haunts is one reason why the chinchbug multiplies as rapidly as it does in some seasons, and Dr. Fitch is mentioned as suggesting the idea of sprinkling.

The artificial remedies given by Dr. Le-Baron, state entomologist of Illinois and quoted by Dr. Thomas, are:

1. The plan of sowing grain so early in the spring as to get in advance of their depressions.

2. The attempt to save a part of the crop by preventing the migration of the bugs from one field to another by furrows or kerosene oil.

3. The method of destroying the insects by burning cornstalks and other rubbish in which they are supposed to hibernate.

4. The prevention of their breeding to any serious extent by abstaining from the cultivation of those grains upon which they chiefly subsist.

Dr. Thomas suggests burning over the infected fields in the winter at the best means of destroying them. Rolling he also suggests. Dr. Thomas concludes by saying that clean farming is the best under all circumstances, and if adopted as a rule will tend largely toward preventing the increase not only of chinchbugs, but of all other injurious insects. He also believes in diversified farming. Massing crops in immense bodies, and cultivating the same thing year after year, tend to increase the insects that feed on these crops.

The Successful Preacher.
Dr. Howard Crosby on Essential Qualifica-

The Yale lectures on preaching for this winter have just been published, after revision by Dr. Crosby. The reverend gentleman, always plain spoken, is particularly so in these interesting addresses. He scribes great importance to physical qualities as articulation keys, instead of making the latter do service for both. He should stand erect, and not stoop over his manuscript. His head should be lifted and his shoulders thrown back, so that his voice be not impeded in its course. The duties of the preacher are so arduous and constant that they compel the necessity of good bodily health. He must be able to bear copious drafts on his nervous system.
Such an enormous strain requires a powerful physical frame. For a weak-bodied man to undertake the duties of the preacher is a tempting of Providence. Unless the lungs and heart and nerves are sound in character and healthful in action, the work of the Lord is to be performed in some other than the public ministry. The prophets of the Old Testament and the apostles of the New were evidently men of strong physical structure.
There is, moreover, a close connection between bodily weakness and erroneous doctrine. Not that a man rejects the attem-ment because he has a complaint of the liver, or that any degree of physical disease implies an abandonment of biblical doctrine; but the coloring of a preacher's theology is no doubt largely affected by the condition of his health. Among the mental characteristics, which Dr. Crosby insists on as an essential condition of usefulness in the preacher, a high place is assigned to acuteness of perception. This involves a rapid glance at all the objects within range of vision. The eye of a watchman sweeps the whole horizon and takes in every tree, bush and rock. The preacher must thoroughly know his subject; but in order to do this he must look at it in every possible light, and note its connection with all other truth. It is easy for an essayist to nurse his theme out of all proportion to its related subjects. The whole is sacrificed for a part, and a part truth is often a falsehood.

Another quality on which Dr. Crosby forcefully dilates is soundness of judgment.
This is the same as tact allied with a high sense of religious duty. Men of tact, however, are scarce. Most men are clumsy in their attempted adaptations. They may be prigodious of learning, and with not a little acuteness of thought on abstract subjects, but stupid and bungling when called upon to deal with their fellow men. But the business of the preacher is conspicuously with men. He should understand human nature in all its manifold phases. He should be able to adapt himself to every one in the fitting way as easily as to breathe. Now most ministers, Dr. Crosby affirms, are proverbially deficient in this qualification. The defect is no doubt exaggerated, but it cannot be denied that there is ground for the criticism.
One reason for the ministerial verdancy, as Dr. Crosby calls it, he finds in the ordinary style of seminary training. It is the life of a cloister. The student is secluded from the busy haunts of men, and even from the smaller cities of social intercourse. His mind is stored with book-knowledge, but he gains no knowledge of the ways of men, with whom he will have to deal. The ordinary minister, says Dr. Crosby, comes out of the seclusion of an incubator. He may be a good scholar and an able reasoner, but he has no place in the seething cauldron of the world. He is utterly dazed by the realities around him. He shows such a weakness in meeting the emergencies of life that he forfeits the respect of the world. The remarks of Dr. Crosby in regard to the conduct and deportment of the preacher might be taken as a manual of good behavior in every condition of life. The preacher, he insists, should always maintain the respect of a gentleman. This word describes the person who is acceptable in all his social relations. Whatever may be his character and tone of mind, he must himself gracefully to the movements of society, and instead of giving a sense of common approval to a gentleman, says Dr. Crosby, is not to be confounded with the man of fashion. He has not learned his conversation from the small talk of the saloons, nor does his personal appearance depend on the art of the tailor. He cultivates good manners because they form the atmosphere of good society, not because they are the fashion of the day. His personal habits should be in keeping with the refinement of his manners. "A preacher who is slovenly in his attire, allowing his hair to be unkempt, his nails uncleaned, his boots unblackened, and his clothes unbrushed, will prove a very poor conductor of Divine truth."

One of Proctor Knott's Stories.
There was some sort of celebration in honor of St. Francois de Xavier, which was attended. A host of negroes in his neighborhood were Catholic. When he came home this darkey boy asked him how he liked the Catholic service. "I," said he, "could not stand it." He said, "There was one point about it that I never liked." "What is that?" said the boy.

"The priest does all his praying in Latin."

At this colored boy fell down in the road, and rolled over shouting with laughter.

"Why, what is the matter with you?" said Knott. The darkey answered: "Fo!" God, massa, don't think that de Lord can't understand de Latin as well as English.

In the Catholic churches de priest he prays to de Lord, and not to de congregation;" and Mr. Knott added that he had been brought up in a church where the preacher prayed to the congregation, and acknowledged that the boy had got the advantage of him.
